

Amy Lynch speaks from experience. While others talk about generational awareness, Amy's clients apply her techniques and strategies in their businesses every day. Her high content programs are filled with memorable stories punctuated with a generous dose of humor. Her book, What's Your Gen IQ? Grow Your Generational Intelligence and Thrive Through Change, is forthcoming.

Her blend of humor, substance and authenticity make her a game-changing speaker. Amy has spoken to 100s of groups from MTV and Reynolds to Boeing, ConEdison, Cisco and the staff of the U.S. Senate.

She has been quoted in The New York Times, Entrepreneur Magazine, Washington Post, USA Today, Huffington Post, Chicago Tribune and NBC Evening News, among others.

Amy lives in Nashville. When she's not speaking or researching the generations, you can find her on her bicycle, Googling tiny houses or, let's be honest, bingeing Stranger Things (again).

Testimonials

▮ "Amy Lynch is an engaging, dynamic presenter and expert on generational trends. The information she shares is not only useful, but necessary. Specifically for the Association of Fundraising Professionals, Amy provided strategies for working with donors of different generations. Her real-world examples, action steps and specific language for framing effective donor solicitations made for a compelling session!" ▮

- Director of Philanthropy The Nature Conservancy.

▮ "When I heard Amy speak, my first thought was 'She gets it. She really gets it when it comes to working with other generations.' We immediately invited her to lead a retreat for our firm." ▮

- Chairman and President Durham, Jones and Pinegar.
