

Barbara Fulmer has dedicated the last 15 years to workforce productivity and corporate health initiatives as a senior level executive within healthcare organizations.

Barbara is the founder and president of Get Corporate Health, dedicated to helping employers proactively take control and create programs to not only motivate employees, but drive behavioral change toward healthier lives and a healthier workforce ... which results in improving productivity, and the bottom line.

As a consultant to Nutrisystem, Medifast and HealthyWage, and former Global Managing Director of Jenny Craig's Corporate Wellness Group, Barbara gained entrée into over three hundred Fortune 1000 corporations. She has had exposure to the costly health issues impacting the American workforce, and seen the challenges from an insider's perspective. Much insight was gleaned from her clients -- the leading employers and healthcare companies in the country - such as Walt Disney, Wells Fargo, RiteAid, Humana, Aetna, Cigna, Anthem/Wellpoint, and most Blue Cross organizations.

Previously, Fulmer was Jenny Craig's National Director of Performance Development, delivering leadership, sales, management and communication training to over 4000 field staff, while introducing cutting edge training programs and innovative training solutions such as blended online learning and knowledge management.

She is a sought after Corporate Wellness thought leader for the leading Expert Network organizations including Gerson Lehrman Group, Tribeca Insights, Coleman Research and others.

Barbara was featured in Fortune, Time Magazine and the New York Times. She is an active member of National Business Group on Health based in Washington DC, World Congress...
