

Keynote speaker Andrew Mellen is a skilled and engaging motivational speaker and an organizational expert. His workshops and seminars offer practical skills and techniques in easy-to-understand language and have helped thousands of people to unstuff their lives.

Andrew will design a program to meet your needs — whether a keynote address, breakout sessions or a stand-alone workshop. Offering real advice and answers, Andrew's humorous and no-nonsense presentations deliver tangible results. Learn from "the most organized man in America" how to clear away the clutter and other obstacles that are keeping you from what's really important. Whether you're looking for the scissors or for personal transformation, Andrew offers direct and practical solutions for both.

He put himself through college with scholarships, roleplaying in the graduate psych department, and by playing drums in several local bands. After graduation, TV, films and theater work provided a steady income — he worked throughout the country at regional theaters and Off-Broadway and was in the film The Untouchables. His work has been featured widely in the media, including The Nate Berkus Show, O, The Oprah Magazine, Martha Stewart Living Today, Ladies' Home Journal, Oprah & Friends, GQ, Women's Day, Instyle, HGTV and NPR, as well as many others.

Eventually, he landed in New York and added administrative work to his portfolio. That led to being recruited to serve as the artistic and producing director of several theaters and art centers (Shuttle Theater Company, DC Arts Center (DCAC), Alice B. Theater). He was nominated for and won some awards, served on panels and led seminars for The Smithsonian Institution, various arts commissions and assorted universities....
