

Jennifer Page is probably best known to you as Mini Darth Vader's mom! Before she became Vader's chauffer, she earned a Communications Degree from the University of Montana, played collegiate golf and managed golf courses in Southern California for 8 years.

Jennifer is a Children's Hospital Los Angeles Foundation Trustee, a passionate leader with the Children's Hospital Association and several health-related charities, and dedicates countless hours giving back to her community. She is forever grateful for the organizations that have helped her son Max flourish despite having congenital heart disease.

Jennifer has been seen numerous times on the Today Show, CNN, Access Hollywood, Extra, Inside Edition, Fox News, and several LA and NY local news affiliates. She is a special contributor to Ad America, CNN, Ladies Home Journal, Cincinnati Children's Hospital Heart Institute, and has appeared in In Touch magazine.

Jennifer speaks nationally about her family's journey of transformation and is passionate about helping others find their way to make a difference in our healthcare system.

Jennifer lives in Orange County, California with her husband Buck and sons Max and Ellison. Their two dogs and a turtle round out the zoo!
